1. In preparation for the Congress of Peoples for Peace, beginning in Vienna on 12 December 1952, 33 additional communist policemen from the Austrian police force were put at the disposal of the Soviet occupation forces. They were actually turned over to the organizers of the Congress.
2. On 10 December, communist police in the Soviet districts ordered all hotel managers not to ask the names of delegates to the Congress and not to register them officially. Many hotels protested this violation of Austrian law to Vienna Police President Josef Holaubek, who ordered that the ruling be revoked. Holaubek's order was ignored.
3. Josef Csarman, police chief of District II, announced that hotel personnel revealing even one name would be punished. Hotels are under constant surveillance and employees of hotels are followed during their off hours. No non-communist police, including vice squads, are allowed to enter hotels. Polizei Oberkommissar Max Goldberger, the communist police chief of District IV, is personally inspecting hotels to insure compliance with security orders.

4. Frederic Joliot-Curie, Chairman of the Congress, announced that no lists of delegates would be released. He stated that many delegates had given false destination addresses when leaving their home countries and that publication of their names would cause them trouble.
5. The total number of delegates in attendance is between 1,500 and 2,000; not 3,500, as announced by the Congress of Peoples for Peace. Four hundred delegates from Hungary, Poland, and Bulgaria arrived eight hours late in Vienna after an eight-hour check by suspicious Hungarian border guards on 9 December.
6. Most delegations from the Soviet satellite nations are picked up at the station by Austrian Communist Party cars, or by cars belonging to the Soviets or their satellites. The railroad stations in the Soviet districts are guarded by communist Austrian police and by Soviet personnel, both in uniform and civilian dress.
7. Delegations from the satellite nations and prominent persons attending the Congress are housed in Soviet controlled districts only. Satellite groups perform all activities together and there is no chance for independent movement around the city.
8. Congress delegates entering the meeting hall (Konzerthaus) must pass four inspections of their credentials. Contact between the delegates and the press is not permitted; delegates were instructed by the Congress Preparatory Committee to give no interviews. Security of the meetings is maintained by communist police, communist-organized factory guards (Werkschutz) and 200 Vienna Party members.
